

MURRAY'S

317 East Broad St.

Greatest Ladies' Outer-Garment Store in the South

Showing more good Suits, selling more good suits and selling them at less than half others' prices.

Now Easter Is Over

And We Propose to Be Busier, Much Busier Than Ever Before!

We do not believe in standing still one moment--every day this store must be simply thronged, and it will be if low prices can accomplish our purpose! Come and share in the great feast of bargains we have prepared for you--you never saw the like in your entire life! Come Monday.

We Will Continue the Tremendous Sale Of

On Sale at 8:30 A. M. Sharp Alterations Free

$15 Spring Suits

$9 at

$25 and $30 Spring Suits $13.50

Without exception, this is the largest and most appropriately appointed Suit Department in Richmond, occupying the entire commodious floor. These attractive new models are of the newest spring colors and navy blue, black and light colors, and smartly trimmed with Directoire, Tuxedo or Medici collars. Stout women can be fitted without alterations.

Wonderful Sale of $50 Model Tailored Suits at Only $24.75

Ultra-fashionable models, duplicating a number of imported Paquin and Poiret Paris creations. At one-half price.

This Dress $9.75

Extra Special 8:30 o'clock Sharp Specials.

Women's and Misses' 44 Dresses to-day at only $3.00 each. Women's Jaunty Summer Coats, only $3.00.

Magnificent $20.00 Spring Dresses $9.75

You hardly realize that you could secure such exquisite creations in crepe de chine, messaline, crepe metier, taffeta, French crepe and other imported weaves. They are ultra-fashionable models, in tango, Copenhagen, navy blue, black, wistaria, green, brown and all the most desired colors. One model illustrated.

WILLCOCKS GREATEST ENGINEER OF PRESENT

Creator of Huge Dam of the Nile Slips Quietly Into New York.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONTENAY. SIR WILLIAM WILLCOCKS, who slipped into New York a few days ago, without attracting any attention, arriving from the Mediterranean on board the White Star liner Celtic, is the greatest engineer of the present day, who may be said to have written his name in large letters in the history of our times. For he is the creator of the huge dam of the Nile at Assouan, besides endowing Egypt with the most wonderful system of irrigation, which has almost doubled the agricultural area of the country. Moreover, by devising an enormous means of ridding the Upper Nile of the mud, which for thousands of years rendered its navigation well-nigh impossible, he has not only transformed the river into a facile means of communication with the interior of the Sudan, and with the remote regions of Central Africa, but has also vastly increased the volume of the stream, which, since the freedom of its channels from the obstructing silt, now reaches the Mediterranean, instead of feeding the swamps of the Upper Sudan. Not content with this, Sir William is at present engaged in transforming Mesopotamia into what it was in ancient times, namely, one of the great granaries of the world, by the reconstruction of the completely ruined network of canals of the Babylonian era, by the creation of an entirely new system of irrigation there, and by means of a mighty scheme for regulation of the Rivers Tigris and Euphrates. In December last his great Hindich dam, or barrage, was inaugurated with much pomp and ceremony by the Turkish Governor-General of Baghdad; a dam which has the effect of diverting the waters of the Euphrates into their old channel, past Babylon, by the waters of which the Jews, hundreds of years before Christ, nourished their captives and wept over the remembrance of their distant Zion. Now Caledonia, sometimes known as Noumea, has played a great role, alike in modern history and in romance, that it seems strange that no notice should have been taken in this country of the somewhat remarkable fact that within the last few months it has ceased to be a penal settlement, and has blossomed forth as an ordinary, respectable colony, desirous to live down the evil name which it has enjoyed in the past, as the place of exile of the worst element of criminal and political offenders of France. It was thither that Henri Rochefort, Oliver Pain, Louise Michel, and hundreds of other Communists who took part in the Paris insurrection of 1871, in the massacre of the hostages, and in the destruction of the Tuilleries, and of other public buildings by fire, were conveyed in cages, after having had their death sentences commuted to penal servitude for life in Noumea. And it is there, too, that the murderers, Fenayrou, Abadie, Gillet and Martin, as well as the anarchists, Duvall, Pini and Simon, were imprisoned, while, at the time of his death, a few years ago, the dean of the life convicts of Noumea, in point of seniority, was the late Henri Rochefort, who will be remembered as having made an attempt upon the life of Czar Alexander II. in Paris, in 1887, as he was doing business on a review at Longchamp, through the Bois de Boulogne, with Napoleon III. and the Czar, afterwards Alexander III. The Communists have now all been transferred from Noumea to French Guiana, which is from now on to be France's only penal settlement, and the Australian government and people will have no further cause for complaint against France, for the depredations perpetrated on its coasts by murderous and desperate convicts who have managed to escape from Noumea. Many generations, will, however, have to live down the evil name which it has enjoyed as a convict colony. That it is not a less task, and that it will eventually accomplish this aim is shown by the efforts of Tasmania, and of New South Wales, both of which were originally penal settlements.

Count Edouard Fitzjames, who has just died in Paris, leaves a little five-year-old orphaned girl, who will from henceforth make her home with his father, old Count Jacques de Fitzjames, at his home in the Rue d'Aguesseau. Count Edouard, like his father, was a descendant of King James II. of England, and has the same blood in his veins as the Dukes of Marlborough. The first Duke of Marlborough, as every one knows, owed all his early promotion, and his chances of distinguishing himself, to the fact that his beautiful sister, Arabella Churchill, wife of Colonel Godolphin, reigned over the heart of James, Duke of York, afterwards James II. King James had a son by Arabella, half-brother, therefore, of the Old Pretender, James, while still on the throne of Great Britain, bestowed upon this illegitimate son, to whom he was devoted, the title of Duke of Berwick, Earl of Tyrone and Baron of Howorth, by a patent dated March 19, 1687. But this Duke of Berwick, who was also created Duke of Fitzjames, by Louis XIV. of France, and Duke of Liria and Zetia, by the King of Spain, was attainted as a Jacobite by the English Parliament, his English honors becoming in consequence forfeited to the crown. He left two sons. The elder succeeded to his Spanish dignities, retaining the British title of Duke of Berwick, under which his descendants figure in the Almanach de Gotha, though it is not recognized in England, while the younger son inherited the French dukedom of Fitzjames. The Spanish dukedom of Liria and Zetia became, through the marriage of the fifth duke to the only daughter and sole heiress of the twelfth Duke of Alba, merged in the historic dukedom of Alba, a title which is now borne in conjunction with that of Berwick, by the Spanish chief of the line, descended from the eldest son of the Duke of Berwick. The present Duke of Alba and Berwick was educated, like his younger brother, the Duke of Pendera, Comte de Montijo, in England, at Beaumont College, near Eton, under the supervision of his grand-aunt, Empress Eugenie, and speaks English without any trace of accent. His father, the late Duke of Alba and Berwick, in New York, at the Waldorf-Astoria, at the time of the American cup races in 1912. While the Duke of Alba is a rich, his kinsman, the French Duke and Count of Fitzjames, who are descended from the younger son of the original Duke of Berwick, are far from being well off, and those who have succeeded in contracting rich marriages can be said to be in affluent circumstances. The head of the Fitzjames family, namely, the seventh duke of his line, is, unlike his father, almost entirely unknown in Parisian life, having spent most of his existence in the colonies, where he contracted marriage with a woman who is ignored by his family, and whose maiden name is not given by the Almanach de Gotha. The name of Fitzjames, though historic, is not particularly popular in France. In fact, it is execrated in all the wine-growing districts. For to the duchess, as ascribed the responsibility for all the ruin and havoc worked by the phylloxera in France, the losses in the Bordeaux district alone being estimated as having exceeded $100,000,000. She imported vines from New World, to plant on her estate in Nugar. They brought the phylloxera with them, and it spread all over France. The next heir to the dukedom is the present duke's only brother, Count Henri Fitzjames, who has frequently visited America, on matrimonial thoughts intent; and on one occasion was over here in the role of the fiance of the late Sybil Sanderson, the operatic prima donna, who afterwards died of cancer. His wife, Mrs. Fitzjames, of Havanna and New York, Count Henri divorced by his first wife, the late Countess Adele de Gontaut-Biron, is now married to Lady, nee Collingdon, widow and heiress of a very wealthy contractor and railroad magnate of the name of Guillon. (Copyright, 1914, by the Brentwood Company.)

Our Many Satisfied Patrons Are Our Best Testimonials.

Have You Teeth

That permit you to chew any kind of food without trouble or annoyance?

If your teeth trouble you, come to us and we'll treat them properly and painlessly at a moderate cost.

Terms to suit patient. No need to let money matters cause you to delay.

All work guaranteed to give lasting satisfaction.

NO CHARGE FOR EXTRACTION WHEN OTHER WORK IS ORDERED

NOTE HOW REASONABLE THESE PRICES ARE

Gold Crown, Bridge Work, $3, $4, $5 Fillings in Gold, Silver, Platinum and Porcelain, 50c to $1

Complete Sets of Teeth $5.00 $8.00 and $10.00 22-karat Gold Crowns, $4.00 $5.00

Ask to See Our Velum Suction Teeth

Call and see us once and you will always call.

Dr. Dellinger, Dentist, Inc. PAINLESS DENTIST.

Open Daily, 8:30 to 7 P. M. Sunday, 10 to 1. 609 East Broad Street.

which the Jews, hundreds of years before Christ, nourished their captives and wept over the remembrance of their distant Zion. Now Caledonia, sometimes known as Noumea, has played a great role, alike in modern history and in romance, that it seems strange that no notice should have been taken in this country of the somewhat remarkable fact that within the last few months it has ceased to be a penal settlement, and has blossomed forth as an ordinary, respectable colony, desirous to live down the evil name which it has enjoyed in the past, as the place of exile of the worst element of criminal and political offenders of France. It was thither that Henri Rochefort, Oliver Pain, Louise Michel, and hundreds of other Communists who took part in the Paris insurrection of 1871, in the massacre of the hostages, and in the destruction of the Tuilleries, and of other public buildings by fire, were conveyed in cages, after having had their death sentences commuted to penal servitude for life in Noumea. And it is there, too, that the murderers, Fenayrou, Abadie, Gillet and Martin, as well as the anarchists, Duvall, Pini and Simon, were imprisoned, while, at the time of his death, a few years ago, the dean of the life convicts of Noumea, in point of seniority, was the late Henri Rochefort, who will be remembered as having made an attempt upon the life of Czar Alexander II. in Paris, in 1887, as he was doing business on a review at Longchamp, through the Bois de Boulogne, with Napoleon III. and the Czar, afterwards Alexander III. The Communists have now all been transferred from Noumea to French Guiana, which is from now on to be France's only penal settlement, and the Australian government and people will have no further cause for complaint against France, for the depredations perpetrated on its coasts by murderous and desperate convicts who have managed to escape from Noumea. Many generations, will, however, have to live down the evil name which it has enjoyed as a convict colony. That it is not a less task, and that it will eventually accomplish this aim is shown by the efforts of Tasmania, and of New South Wales, both of which were originally penal settlements.

Count Edouard Fitzjames, who has just died in Paris, leaves a little five-year-old orphaned girl, who will from henceforth make her home with his father, old Count Jacques de Fitzjames, at his home in the Rue d'Aguesseau. Count Edouard, like his father, was a descendant of King James II. of England, and has the same blood in his veins as the Dukes of Marlborough. The first Duke of Marlborough, as every one knows, owed all his early promotion, and his chances of distinguishing himself, to the fact that his beautiful sister, Arabella Churchill, wife of Colonel Godolphin, reigned over the heart of James, Duke of York, afterwards James II. King James had a son by Arabella, half-brother, therefore, of the Old Pretender, James, while still on the throne of Great Britain, bestowed upon this illegitimate son, to whom he was devoted, the title of Duke of Berwick, Earl of Tyrone and Baron of Howorth, by a patent dated March 19, 1687. But this Duke of Berwick, who was also created Duke of Fitzjames, by Louis XIV. of France, and Duke of Liria and Zetia, by the King of Spain, was attainted as a Jacobite by the English Parliament, his English honors becoming in consequence forfeited to the crown. He left two sons. The elder succeeded to his Spanish dignities, retaining the British title of Duke of Berwick, under which his descendants figure in the Almanach de Gotha, though it is not recognized in England, while the younger son inherited the French dukedom of Fitzjames. The Spanish dukedom of Liria and Zetia became, through the marriage of the fifth duke to the only daughter and sole heiress of the twelfth Duke of Alba, merged in the historic dukedom of Alba, a title which is now borne in conjunction with that of Berwick, by the Spanish chief of the line, descended from the eldest son of the Duke of Berwick. The present Duke of Alba and Berwick was educated, like his younger brother, the Duke of Pendera, Comte de Montijo, in England, at Beaumont College, near Eton, under the supervision of his grand-aunt, Empress Eugenie, and speaks English without any trace of accent. His father, the late Duke of Alba and Berwick, in New York, at the Waldorf-Astoria, at the time of the American cup races in 1912. While the Duke of Alba is a rich, his kinsman, the French Duke and Count of Fitzjames, who are descended from the younger son of the original Duke of Berwick, are far from being well off, and those who have succeeded in contracting rich marriages can be said to be in affluent circumstances. The head of the Fitzjames family, namely, the seventh duke of his line, is, unlike his father, almost entirely unknown in Parisian life, having spent most of his existence in the colonies, where he contracted marriage with a woman who is ignored by his family, and whose maiden name is not given by the Almanach de Gotha. The name of Fitzjames, though historic, is not particularly popular in France. In fact, it is execrated in all the wine-growing districts. For to the duchess, as ascribed the responsibility for all the ruin and havoc worked by the phylloxera in France, the losses in the Bordeaux district alone being estimated as having exceeded $100,000,000. She imported vines from New World, to plant on her estate in Nugar. They brought the phylloxera with them, and it spread all over France. The next heir to the dukedom is the present duke's only brother, Count Henri Fitzjames, who has frequently visited America, on matrimonial thoughts intent; and on one occasion was over here in the role of the fiance of the late Sybil Sanderson, the operatic prima donna, who afterwards died of cancer. His wife, Mrs. Fitzjames, of Havanna and New York, Count Henri divorced by his first wife, the late Countess Adele de Gontaut-Biron, is now married to Lady, nee Collingdon, widow and heiress of a very wealthy contractor and railroad magnate of the name of Guillon. (Copyright, 1914, by the Brentwood Company.)

Count Edouard Fitzjames, who has just died in Paris, leaves a little five-year-old orphaned girl, who will from henceforth make her home with his father, old Count Jacques de Fitzjames, at his home in the Rue d'Aguesseau. Count Edouard, like his father, was a descendant of King James II. of England, and has the same blood in his veins as the Dukes of Marlborough. The first Duke of Marlborough, as every one knows, owed all his early promotion, and his chances of distinguishing himself, to the fact that his beautiful sister, Arabella Churchill, wife of Colonel Godolphin, reigned over the heart of James, Duke of York, afterwards James II. King James had a son by Arabella, half-brother, therefore, of the Old Pretender, James, while still on the throne of Great Britain, bestowed upon this illegitimate son, to whom he was devoted, the title of Duke of Berwick, Earl of Tyrone and Baron of Howorth, by a patent dated March 19, 1687. But this Duke of Berwick, who was also created Duke of Fitzjames, by Louis XIV. of France, and Duke of Liria and Zetia, by the King of Spain, was attainted as a Jacobite by the English Parliament, his English honors becoming in consequence forfeited to the crown. He left two sons. The elder succeeded to his Spanish dignities, retaining the British title of Duke of Berwick, under which his descendants figure in the Almanach de Gotha, though it is not recognized in England, while the younger son inherited the French dukedom of Fitzjames. The Spanish dukedom of Liria and Zetia became, through the marriage of the fifth duke to the only daughter and sole heiress of the twelfth Duke of Alba, merged in the historic dukedom of Alba, a title which is now borne in conjunction with that of Berwick, by the Spanish chief of the line, descended from the eldest son of the Duke of Berwick. The present Duke of Alba and Berwick was educated, like his younger brother, the Duke of Pendera, Comte de Montijo, in England, at Beaumont College, near Eton, under the supervision of his grand-aunt, Empress Eugenie, and speaks English without any trace of accent. His father, the late Duke of Alba and Berwick, in New York, at the Waldorf-Astoria, at the time of the American cup races in 1912. While the Duke of Alba is a rich, his kinsman, the French Duke and Count of Fitzjames, who are descended from the younger son of the original Duke of Berwick, are far from being well off, and those who have succeeded in contracting rich marriages can be said to be in affluent circumstances. The head of the Fitzjames family, namely, the seventh duke of his line, is, unlike his father, almost entirely unknown in Parisian life, having spent most of his existence in the colonies, where he contracted marriage with a woman who is ignored by his family, and whose maiden name is not given by the Almanach de Gotha. The name of Fitzjames, though historic, is not particularly popular in France. In fact, it is execrated in all the wine-growing districts. For to the duchess, as ascribed the responsibility for all the ruin and havoc worked by the phylloxera in France, the losses in the Bordeaux district alone being estimated as having exceeded $100,000,000. She imported vines from New World, to plant on her estate in Nugar. They brought the phylloxera with them, and it spread all over France. The next heir to the dukedom is the present duke's only brother, Count Henri Fitzjames, who has frequently visited America, on matrimonial thoughts intent; and on one occasion was over here in the role of the fiance of the late Sybil Sanderson, the operatic prima donna, who afterwards died of cancer. His wife, Mrs. Fitzjames, of Havanna and New York, Count Henri divorced by his first wife, the late Countess Adele de Gontaut-Biron, is now married to Lady, nee Collingdon, widow and heiress of a very wealthy contractor and railroad magnate of the name of Guillon. (Copyright, 1914, by the Brentwood Company.)

Count Edouard Fitzjames, who has just died in Paris, leaves a little five-year-old orphaned girl, who will from henceforth make her home with his father, old Count Jacques de Fitzjames, at his home in the Rue d'Aguesseau. Count Edouard, like his father, was a descendant of King James II. of England, and has the same blood in his veins as the Dukes of Marlborough. The first Duke of Marlborough, as every one knows, owed all his early promotion, and his chances of distinguishing himself, to the fact that his beautiful sister, Arabella Churchill, wife of Colonel Godolphin, reigned over the heart of James, Duke of York, afterwards James II. King James had a son by Arabella, half-brother, therefore, of the Old Pretender, James, while still on the throne of Great Britain, bestowed upon this illegitimate son, to whom he was devoted, the title of Duke of Berwick, Earl of Tyrone and Baron of Howorth, by a patent dated March 19, 1687. But this Duke of Berwick, who was also created Duke of Fitzjames, by Louis XIV. of France, and Duke of Liria and Zetia, by the King of Spain, was attainted as a Jacobite by the English Parliament, his English honors becoming in consequence forfeited to the crown. He left two sons. The elder succeeded to his Spanish dignities, retaining the British title of Duke of Berwick, under which his descendants figure in the Almanach de Gotha, though it is not recognized in England, while the younger son inherited the French dukedom of Fitzjames. The Spanish dukedom of Liria and Zetia became, through the marriage of the fifth duke to the only daughter and sole heiress of the twelfth Duke of Alba, merged in the historic dukedom of Alba, a title which is now borne in conjunction with that of Berwick, by the Spanish chief of the line, descended from the eldest son of the Duke of Berwick. The present Duke of Alba and Berwick was educated, like his younger brother, the Duke of Pendera, Comte de Montijo, in England, at Beaumont College, near Eton, under the supervision of his grand-aunt, Empress Eugenie, and speaks English without any trace of accent. His father, the late Duke of Alba and Berwick, in New York, at the Waldorf-Astoria, at the time of the American cup races in 1912. While the Duke of Alba is a rich, his kinsman, the French Duke and Count of Fitzjames, who are descended from the younger son of the original Duke of Berwick, are far from being well off, and those who have succeeded in contracting rich marriages can be said to be in affluent circumstances. The head of the Fitzjames family, namely, the seventh duke of his line, is, unlike his father, almost entirely unknown in Parisian life, having spent most of his existence in the colonies, where he contracted marriage with a woman who is ignored by his family, and whose maiden name is not given by the Almanach de Gotha. The name of Fitzjames, though historic, is not particularly popular in France. In fact, it is execrated in all the wine-growing districts. For to the duchess, as ascribed the responsibility for all the ruin and havoc worked by the phylloxera in France, the losses in the Bordeaux district alone being estimated as having exceeded $100,000,000. She imported vines from New World, to plant on her estate in Nugar. They brought the phylloxera with them, and it spread all over France. The next heir to the dukedom is the present duke's only brother, Count Henri Fitzjames, who has frequently visited America, on matrimonial thoughts intent; and on one occasion was over here in the role of the fiance of the late Sybil Sanderson, the operatic prima donna, who afterwards died of cancer. His wife, Mrs. Fitzjames, of Havanna and New York, Count Henri divorced by his first wife, the late Countess Adele de Gontaut-Biron, is now married to Lady, nee Collingdon, widow and heiress of a very wealthy contractor and railroad magnate of the name of Guillon. (Copyright, 1914, by the Brentwood Company.)

Count Edouard Fitzjames, who has just died in Paris, leaves a little five-year-old orphaned girl, who will from henceforth make her home with his father, old Count Jacques de Fitzjames, at his home in the Rue d'Aguesseau. Count Edouard, like his father, was a descendant of King James II. of England, and has the same blood in his veins as the Dukes of Marlborough. The first Duke of Marlborough, as every one knows, owed all his early promotion, and his chances of distinguishing himself, to the fact that his beautiful sister, Arabella Churchill, wife of Colonel Godolphin, reigned over the heart of James, Duke of York, afterwards James II. King James had a son by Arabella, half-brother, therefore, of the Old Pretender, James, while still on the throne of Great Britain, bestowed upon this illegitimate son, to whom he was devoted, the title of Duke of Berwick, Earl of Tyrone and Baron of Howorth, by a patent dated March 19, 1687. But this Duke of Berwick, who was also created Duke of Fitzjames, by Louis XIV. of France, and Duke of Liria and Zetia, by the King of Spain, was attainted as a Jacobite by the English Parliament, his English honors becoming in consequence forfeited to the crown. He left two sons. The elder succeeded to his Spanish dignities, retaining the British title of Duke of Berwick, under which his descendants figure in the Almanach de Gotha, though it is not recognized in England, while the younger son inherited the French dukedom of Fitzjames. The Spanish dukedom of Liria and Zetia became, through the marriage of the fifth duke to the only daughter and sole heiress of the twelfth Duke of Alba, merged in the historic dukedom of Alba, a title which is now borne in conjunction with that of Berwick, by the Spanish chief of the line, descended from the eldest son of the Duke of Berwick. The present Duke of Alba and Berwick was educated, like his younger brother, the Duke of Pendera, Comte de Montijo, in England, at Beaumont College, near Eton, under the supervision of his grand-aunt, Empress Eugenie, and speaks English without any trace of accent. His father, the late Duke of Alba and Berwick, in New York, at the Waldorf-Astoria, at the time of the American cup races in 1912. While the Duke of Alba is a rich, his kinsman, the French Duke and Count of Fitzjames, who are descended from the younger son of the original Duke of Berwick, are far from being well off, and those who have succeeded in contracting rich marriages can be said to be in affluent circumstances. The head of the Fitzjames family, namely, the seventh duke of his line, is, unlike his father, almost entirely unknown in Parisian life, having spent most of his existence in the colonies, where he contracted marriage with a woman who is ignored by his family, and whose maiden name is not given by the Almanach de Gotha. The name of Fitzjames, though historic, is not particularly popular in France. In fact, it is execrated in all the wine-growing districts. For to the duchess, as ascribed the responsibility for all the ruin and havoc worked by the phylloxera in France, the losses in the Bordeaux district alone being estimated as having exceeded $100,000,000. She imported vines from New World, to plant on her estate in Nugar. They brought the phylloxera with them, and it spread all over France. The next heir to the dukedom is the present duke's only brother, Count Henri Fitzjames, who has frequently visited America, on matrimonial thoughts intent; and on one occasion was over here in the role of the fiance of the late Sybil Sanderson, the operatic prima donna, who afterwards died of cancer. His wife, Mrs. Fitzjames, of Havanna and New York, Count Henri divorced by his first wife, the late Countess Adele de Gontaut-Biron, is now married to Lady, nee Collingdon, widow and heiress of a very wealthy contractor and railroad magnate of the name of Guillon. (Copyright, 1914, by the Brentwood Company.)

Count Edouard Fitzjames, who has just died in Paris, leaves a little five-year-old orphaned girl, who will from henceforth make her home with his father, old Count Jacques de Fitzjames, at his home in the Rue d'Aguesseau. Count Edouard, like his father, was a descendant of King James II. of England, and has the same blood in his veins as the Dukes of Marlborough. The first Duke of Marlborough, as every one knows, owed all his early promotion, and his chances of distinguishing himself, to the fact that his beautiful sister, Arabella Churchill, wife of Colonel Godolphin, reigned over the heart of James, Duke of York, afterwards James II. King James had a son by Arabella, half-brother, therefore, of the Old Pretender, James, while still on the throne of Great Britain, bestowed upon this illegitimate son, to whom he was devoted, the title of Duke of Berwick, Earl of Tyrone and Baron of Howorth, by a patent dated March 19, 1687. But this Duke of Berwick, who was also created Duke of Fitzjames, by Louis XIV. of France, and Duke of Liria and Zetia, by the King of Spain, was attainted as a Jacobite by the English Parliament, his English honors becoming in consequence forfeited to the crown. He left two sons. The elder succeeded to his Spanish dignities, retaining the British title of Duke of Berwick, under which his descendants figure in the Almanach de Gotha, though it is not recognized in England, while the younger son inherited the French dukedom of Fitzjames. The Spanish dukedom of Liria and Zetia became, through the marriage of the fifth duke to the only daughter and sole heiress of the twelfth Duke of Alba, merged in the historic dukedom of Alba, a title which is now borne in conjunction with that of Berwick, by the Spanish chief of the line, descended from the eldest son of the Duke of Berwick. The present Duke of Alba and Berwick was educated, like his younger brother, the Duke of Pendera, Comte de Montijo, in England, at Beaumont College, near Eton, under the supervision of his grand-aunt, Empress Eugenie, and speaks English without any trace of accent. His father, the late Duke of Alba and Berwick, in New York, at the Waldorf-Astoria, at the time of the American cup races in 1912. While the Duke of Alba is a rich, his kinsman, the French Duke and Count of Fitzjames, who are descended from the younger son of the original Duke of Berwick, are far from being well off, and those who have succeeded in contracting rich marriages can be said to be in affluent circumstances. The head of the Fitzjames family, namely, the seventh duke of his line, is, unlike his father, almost entirely unknown in Parisian life, having spent most of his existence in the colonies, where he contracted marriage with a woman who is ignored by his family, and whose maiden name is not given by the Almanach de Gotha. The name of Fitzjames, though historic, is not particularly popular in France. In fact, it is execrated in all the wine-growing districts. For to the duchess, as ascribed the responsibility for all the ruin and havoc worked by the phylloxera in France, the losses in the Bordeaux district alone being estimated as having exceeded $100,000,000. She imported vines from New World, to plant on her estate in Nugar. They brought the phylloxera with them, and it spread all over France. The next heir to the dukedom is the present duke's only brother, Count Henri Fitzjames, who has frequently visited America, on matrimonial thoughts intent; and on one occasion was over here in the role of the fiance of the late Sybil Sanderson, the operatic prima donna, who afterwards died of cancer. His wife, Mrs. Fitzjames, of Havanna and New York, Count Henri divorced by his first wife, the late Countess Adele de Gontaut-Biron, is now married to Lady, nee Collingdon, widow and heiress of a very wealthy contractor and railroad magnate of the name of Guillon. (Copyright, 1914, by the Brentwood Company.)

Count Edouard Fitzjames, who has just died in Paris, leaves a little five-year-old orphaned girl, who will from henceforth make her home with his father, old Count Jacques de Fitzjames, at his home in the Rue d'Aguesseau. Count Edouard, like his father, was a descendant of King James II. of England, and has the same blood in his veins as the Dukes of Marlborough. The first Duke of Marlborough, as every one knows, owed all his early promotion, and his chances of distinguishing himself, to the fact that his beautiful sister, Arabella Churchill, wife of Colonel Godolphin, reigned over the heart of James, Duke of York, afterwards James II. King James had a son by Arabella, half-brother, therefore, of the Old Pretender, James, while still on the throne of Great Britain, bestowed upon this illegitimate son, to whom he was devoted, the title of Duke of Berwick, Earl of Tyrone and Baron of Howorth, by a patent dated March 19, 1687. But this Duke of Berwick, who was also created Duke of Fitzjames, by Louis XIV. of France, and Duke of Liria and Zetia, by the King of Spain, was attainted as a Jacobite by the English Parliament, his English honors becoming in consequence forfeited to the crown. He left two sons. The elder succeeded to his Spanish dignities, retaining the British title of Duke of Berwick, under which his descendants figure in the Almanach de Gotha, though it is not recognized in England, while the younger son inherited the French dukedom of Fitzjames. The Spanish dukedom of Liria and Zetia became, through the marriage of the fifth duke to the only daughter and sole heiress of the twelfth Duke of Alba, merged in the historic dukedom of Alba, a title which is now borne in conjunction with that of Berwick, by the Spanish chief of the line, descended from the eldest son of the Duke of Berwick. The present Duke of Alba and Berwick was educated, like his younger brother, the Duke of Pendera, Comte de Montijo, in England, at Beaumont College, near Eton, under the supervision of his grand-aunt, Empress Eugenie, and speaks English without any trace of accent. His father, the late Duke of Alba and Berwick, in New York, at the Waldorf-Astoria, at the time of the American cup races in 1912. While the Duke of Alba is a rich, his kinsman, the French Duke and Count of Fitzjames, who are descended from the younger son of the original Duke of Berwick, are far from being well off, and those who have succeeded in contracting rich marriages can be said to be in affluent circumstances. The head of the Fitzjames family, namely, the seventh duke of his line, is, unlike his father, almost entirely unknown in Parisian life, having spent most of his existence in the colonies, where he contracted marriage with a woman who is ignored by his family, and whose maiden name is not given by the Almanach de Gotha. The name of Fitzjames, though historic, is not particularly popular in France. In fact, it is execrated in all the wine-growing districts. For to the duchess, as ascribed the responsibility for all the ruin and havoc worked by the phylloxera in France, the losses in the Bordeaux district alone being estimated as having exceeded $100,000,000. She imported vines from New World, to plant on her estate in Nugar. They brought the phylloxera with them, and it spread all over France. The next heir to the dukedom is the present duke's only brother, Count Henri Fitzjames, who has frequently visited America, on matrimonial thoughts intent; and on one occasion was over here in the role of the fiance of the late Sybil Sanderson, the operatic prima donna, who afterwards died of cancer. His wife, Mrs. Fitzjames, of Havanna and New York, Count Henri divorced by his first wife, the late Countess Adele de Gontaut-Biron, is now married to Lady, nee Collingdon, widow and heiress of a very wealthy contractor and railroad magnate of the name of Guillon. (Copyright, 1914, by the Brentwood Company.)

Count Edouard Fitzjames, who has just died in Paris, leaves a little five-year-old orphaned girl, who will from henceforth make her home with his father, old Count Jacques de Fitzjames, at his home in the Rue d'Aguesseau. Count Edouard, like his father, was a descendant of King James II. of England, and has the same blood in his veins as the Dukes of Marlborough. The first Duke of Marlborough, as every one knows, owed all his early promotion, and his chances of distinguishing himself, to the fact that his beautiful sister, Arabella Churchill, wife of Colonel Godolphin, reigned over the heart of James, Duke of York, afterwards James II. King James had a son by Arabella, half-brother, therefore, of the Old Pretender, James, while still on the throne of Great Britain, bestowed upon this illegitimate son, to whom he was devoted, the title of Duke of Berwick, Earl of Tyrone and Baron of Howorth, by a patent dated March 19, 1687. But this Duke of Berwick, who was also created Duke of Fitzjames, by Louis XIV. of France, and Duke of Liria and Zetia, by the King of Spain, was attainted as a Jacobite by the English Parliament, his English honors becoming in consequence forfeited to the crown. He left two sons. The elder succeeded to his Spanish dignities, retaining the British title of Duke of Berwick, under which his descendants figure in the Almanach de Gotha, though it is not recognized in England, while the younger son inherited the French dukedom of Fitzjames. The Spanish dukedom of Liria and Zetia became, through the marriage of the fifth duke to the only daughter and sole heiress of the twelfth Duke of Alba, merged in the historic dukedom of Alba, a title which is now borne in conjunction with that of Berwick, by the Spanish chief of the line, descended from the eldest son of the Duke of Berwick. The present Duke of Alba and Berwick was educated, like his younger brother, the Duke of Pendera, Comte de Montijo, in England, at Beaumont College, near Eton, under the supervision of his grand-aunt, Empress Eugenie, and speaks English without any trace of accent. His father, the late Duke of Alba and Berwick, in New York, at the Waldorf-Astoria, at the time of the American cup races in 1912. While the Duke of Alba is a rich, his kinsman, the French Duke and Count of Fitzjames, who are descended from the younger son of the original Duke of Berwick, are far from being well off, and those who have succeeded in contracting rich marriages can be said to be in affluent circumstances. The head of the Fitzjames family, namely, the seventh duke of his line, is, unlike his father, almost entirely unknown in Parisian life, having spent most of his existence in the colonies, where he contracted marriage with a woman who is ignored by his family, and whose maiden name is not given by the Almanach de Gotha. The name of Fitzjames, though historic, is not particularly popular in France. In fact, it is execrated in all the wine-growing districts. For to the duchess, as ascribed the responsibility for all the ruin and havoc worked by the phylloxera in France, the losses in the Bordeaux district alone being estimated as having exceeded $100,000,000. She imported vines from New World, to plant on her estate in Nugar. They brought the phylloxera with them, and it spread all over France. The next heir to the dukedom is the present duke's only brother, Count Henri Fitzjames, who has frequently visited America, on matrimonial thoughts intent; and on one occasion was over here in the role of the fiance of the late Sybil Sanderson, the operatic prima donna, who afterwards died of cancer. His wife, Mrs. Fitzjames, of Havanna and New York, Count Henri divorced by his first wife, the late Countess Adele de Gontaut-Biron, is now married to Lady, nee Collingdon, widow and heiress of a very wealthy contractor and railroad magnate of the name of Guillon. (Copyright, 1914, by the Brentwood Company.)

Count Edouard Fitzjames, who has just died in Paris, leaves a little five-year-old orphaned girl, who will from henceforth make her home with his father, old Count Jacques de Fitzjames, at his home in the Rue d'Aguesseau. Count Edouard, like his father, was a descendant of King James II. of England, and has the same blood in his veins as the Dukes of Marlborough. The first Duke of Marlborough, as every one knows, owed all his early promotion, and his chances of distinguishing himself, to the fact that his beautiful sister, Arabella Churchill, wife of Colonel Godolphin, reigned over the heart of James, Duke of York, afterwards James II. King James had a son by Arabella, half-brother, therefore, of the Old Pretender, James, while still on the throne of Great Britain, bestowed upon this illegitimate son, to whom he was devoted, the title of Duke of Berwick, Earl of Tyrone and Baron of Howorth, by a patent dated March 19, 1687. But this Duke of Berwick, who was also created Duke of Fitzjames, by Louis XIV. of France, and Duke of Liria and Zetia, by the King of Spain, was attainted as a Jacobite by the English Parliament, his English honors becoming in consequence forfeited to the crown. He left two sons. The elder succeeded to his Spanish dignities, retaining the British title of Duke of Berwick, under which his descendants figure in the Almanach de Gotha, though it is not recognized in England, while the younger son inherited the French dukedom of Fitzjames. The Spanish dukedom of Liria and Zetia became, through the marriage of the fifth duke to the only daughter and sole heiress of the twelfth Duke of Alba, merged in the historic dukedom of Alba, a title which is now borne in conjunction with that of Berwick, by the Spanish chief of the line, descended from the eldest son of the Duke of Berwick. The present Duke of Alba and Berwick was educated, like his younger brother, the Duke of Pendera, Comte de Montijo, in England, at Beaumont College, near Eton, under the supervision of his grand-aunt, Empress Eugenie, and speaks English without any trace of accent. His father, the late Duke of Alba and Berwick, in New York, at the Waldorf-Astoria, at the time of the American cup races in 1912. While the Duke of Alba is a rich, his kinsman, the French Duke and Count of Fitzjames, who are descended from the younger son of the original Duke of Berwick, are far from being well off, and those who have succeeded in contracting rich marriages can be said to be in affluent circumstances. The head of the Fitzjames family, namely, the seventh duke of his line, is, unlike his father, almost entirely unknown in Parisian life, having spent most of his existence in the colonies, where he contracted marriage with a woman who is ignored by his family, and whose maiden name is not given by the Almanach de Gotha. The name of Fitzjames, though historic, is not particularly popular in France. In fact, it is execrated in all the wine-growing districts. For to the duchess, as ascribed the responsibility for all the ruin and havoc worked by the phylloxera in France, the losses in the Bordeaux district alone being estimated as having exceeded $100,000,000. She imported vines from New World, to plant on her estate in Nugar. They brought the phylloxera with them, and it spread all over France. The next heir to the dukedom is the present duke's only brother, Count Henri Fitzjames, who has frequently visited America, on matrimonial thoughts intent; and on one occasion was over here in the role of the fiance of the late Sybil Sanderson, the operatic prima donna, who afterwards died of cancer. His wife, Mrs. Fitzjames, of Havanna and New York, Count Henri divorced by his first wife, the late Countess Adele de Gontaut-Biron, is now married to Lady, nee Collingdon, widow and heiress of a very wealthy contractor and railroad magnate of the name of Guillon. (Copyright, 1914, by the Brentwood Company.)

Count Edouard Fitzjames, who has just died in Paris, leaves a little five-year-old orphaned girl, who will from henceforth make her home with his father, old Count Jacques de Fitzjames, at